Ask v/s Questioning

Is there really a difference between asking and questioning? In our search for guidance, knowledge, understanding and insight, surely we need to interact and be curious?

How else can we learn?

It is all about our mindset and how we approach and receive data and information. To further approach this, we need to comprehend what information is. Oxford Languages def:

*"1. facts provided or learned about something or someone"
"a vital piece of information"*

*"2. what is conveyed or represented by a particular arrangement or sequence of things."
"genetically transmitted information"*

By this definition we can see that data is put in form, information by some entity intentionally by will. We did not arrange the data in formation by ourselves, it appeared to us in form, information. And we all know that data can be put in form in different ways according to what intention is behind. ...Or? Because, "information" that we receive is not to be mistaken for the raw data provided in fragment, measurement values or self-evident true facts.

"true facts compiled into information can, depending on the intention, change its nature to no longer be true facts."

So what is all this about? What's the issue here? Why is this important? Does it matter how you read and interpret it?

It is all about the mindset we wear and the state of awareness, ability we possess to deal with this situation. Because when you receive information asked for... You are in a receptive mode ... right? ... and from that comes you expect to have the solution delivered, complete or partly. That openness in mindset makes you actually very vulnerable for propaganda, lies, another entity's intention and will. We also cling to the role of giving our Sovereignty away to some teaching, authority higher source or entity.

Our mindset has configured to be in a position of passivity, waiting mode and receptiveness. Instead of just eating what's served and digest it, we can take another approach. Because that state of mind differs from the active aware seeker, the mindset of the child's curiosity, that questions every piece of data, information and so-called truth served. By possessing the mindset of that active seeker we might not find what we seek directly. First it will provide some more effort, some more seeking, patience and examination of the subject. While doing that, we are opening also our inner channel of intuition to our center, to our inner guidance of spirit, and before you know you'll find the answer, the intuition serves and truth make entrè and reviel's. This influence will automatically be recognized as truth by our Nature. So, to confront information in the state of self-awareness makes yourself control the mind instead of letting external source's information from interact and take control.

Reading activates the mind in a vital and questioning way, while passively watching videos puts us in a programming state.

Allowing your mindset to be programmed for a long time in a passive state requires your sincere intention and activity to a corresponding extent to deprogram it.

"The truth will set you free! ,, but it will not automatically be the first to appear, you need to find it."
